Title: Heart of Glass

Diatoms are single cell aquatic plants whose cell walls are made of silica (glass) that can form intricate morphologies. The cell walls of various diatom species have been arranged in the form of a 'lay person's heart'. This ornate glass heart is symbolic of how dichotomous emotions may be on a hospital floor at any given point during the day; ready to shimmer with the arrival of good news, ready to break when bad news is delivered. Thanks to Dr. Irena Kaczmarkska and James Ehrman for permission to use the SEM images of diatoms generated in the Digital Microscope Facility at Mount Allison University.
