PREFACE

The Project: Remembering Black Loyalists, Black Communities

The history of the Black citizens of Nova Scotia is a rich and varied one. This diverse matrix – African slaves and freedmen, Black Loyalists from the United States, the Nova Scotian colonists of Sierra Leone, the Maroons from Jamaica, the refugees of the War of 1812 – is a fascinating addition to Canadian multiculturalism, yet it has been largely overlooked.

Beginning in 1991, the Nova Scotia Museum (NSM) began to redress this lack through undertaking research into African Nova Scotian heritage and developing a collection of data on Black cultural heritage. By 1997, our attention had become focused on the earliest group to emigrate to the province: the Black Loyalists. In particular, we were interested in knowing more about Birchtown – at one time the largest community of free Blacks anywhere in the New World – and Tracadie, one of the oldest continuously Black communities in Canada.

The result was the two-year project Remembering Black Loyalists, Black Communities, undertaken by the History Section of the Nova Scotia Museum, in partnership with the communities of Birchtown / South Nova (through the Black Loyalist Heritage Society) and Tracadie / Guysborough (through the Brownspriggs Historical Committee), as well as the Black Cultural Centre for Nova Scotia, and the Learning Resources Technology Division and the African Canadian Services Division of the Nova Scotia Department of Education.

This project was funded by the Multiculturalism Programme of the Department of Canadian Heritage and by the History Section of the Nova Scotia Museum.

Project Description

Remembering Black Loyalists, Black Communities consisted of three components: research, public education, and community development. A team composed of Nova Scotia Museum staff and project staff worked with an Advisory Group to plan, coordinate, implement, monitor and evaluate all aspects of the project from its commencement in late January 1998 to its completion in late January 2000.

Members of the Advisory Group included representatives from the two communities: Gloria Desmond, Pat Skinner, Sharon Clyke-Oliver, later replaced by Marjorie Turner-Bailey, and Richard Gallion; a representative from the Black Cultural Centre for Nova Scotia, Henry Bishop; Robert Upshaw, later replaced by Patrick Kakembo, from the African-Canadian Services Division of the Department of Education; David States from Parks Canada Atlantic Regional Office, and Gilbert Daye from the Department of Canadian Heritage Multiculturalism.

Historical Research

Historical research involved two principal streams: research aimed at better understanding the circumstances and connections of Black Loyalists prior to their removal to Nova Scotia, and research focussing on the experience of Black Loyalists once they arrived in the province.

Research on the pre-Nova Scotian context was undertaken by the NSM's ethnologist, Ruth Holmes Whitehead, who focussed on sources that provided information on the conditions from which the Black Loyalists came - principally slavery - and the reason for their migration, the American Revolution. Because many of those who emigrated to Nova Scotia came from South Carolina, emphasis was put on researching South Carolina sources, such as wills and inventories, maps, diaries, contemporary narratives and runaway slave ads, to determine exactly where individual Black Loyalists had worked and lived, their genealogies, and history of ownership if enslaved.

Working under Ruth Whitehead's direction, research on the Nova Scotian context was undertaken by Project Historian Carmelita Robertson, a Black Loyalist descendant. Importantly, the Project Historian's work included training and coordinating local researchers in each of the two Black Loyalist communities: in Birchtown, Marjorie Turner-Bailey, Gary Jacklin and David Hartley, who are all descendants of Black Loyalists, and in Tracadie, Monica Kennedy. Training workshops held with local researchers included hands-on instruction in conducting oral interviews, locating and accessing research sources, and collecting and recording historical data.

Copies of the following historical research data will be maintained and made available by the History Section of the Nova Scotia Museum, with copies provided to community partners:

- Oral interviews (tapes and transcripts)
- Family genealogies (Birchtown/Shelburne only)
- Historic photographs
- Wills (abstracts & copies if available)
- Cemetery inventories
- Land papers (abstracts & copies if available)
- Inventory site forms for buildings associated with Black Loyalists and their descendants
- Miscellaneous material, including church records, newspaper survey (Shelburne papers), diaries, contemporary narratives, and ledger books.

Archaeological Research

Working under the direction of NSM archaeologist David Christianson, Project Archaeologist Stephen Powell oversaw the Tracadie field work during May and early June 1998, while Project Archaeologist Laird Niven led the field work in Birchtown from early June to late August 1998. Field work in both locations was supported by Field Assistants Katie Cottreau-Robins and Sharain Jones, a Black Loyalist descendant. Additional field support in Tracadie was provided by volunteer James Desmond, and in Birchtown by three individuals hired by the Black Loyalist Heritage Society: Corey Guye, Amanda Page, and Stanley Bower.

Tracadie

Since there had been no survey of Black Loyalist settlement features in the Tracadie area, the main focus of the Tracadie archaeology was to locate and document sites associated with early Black Loyalist settlers in the 1787 Brownspriggs-grant area of Antigonish and Guysborough Counties.

Sixteen areas of archaeological interest were recorded during the course of the survey. Based on a small artifact sample, evidence found at one site located within the 1787 grant area suggests it may have been the home of one of the first Black families in the East Tracadie area. Many of the other sites found during the survey can be directly associated with the descendants of Black Loyalist families. While more work is required to record settlement features and cemetery sites in greater detail, this preliminary archaeological study increases the awareness and knowledge of Black Loyalist sites within eastern Nova Scotia.

Birchtown

In contrast, archaeological work in Birchtown began in 1993 and has continued every year since that time, revealing the location of a number of features associated with Black Loyalist settlement. As a result, the principal objective of the Birchtown archaeology was to gain a deeper understanding of the community through more detailed archaeological investigation of selected settlement features.

The field work was designed in three phases:

- (i) Surveying of the Goulden and Acker properties, land suspected of having belonged to Col. Stephen Blucke, the man who led the Black Loyalists in Birchtown. This survey led to a decision to carry out a detailed excavation on the site, in search of a house formerly on the property. As stated in Laird Niven's report, "The testing and excavation revealed the cellar of a relatively substantial building that appears to have been abandoned by the end of the eighteenth century. The artifacts recovered were exceptional for what we know of the Black Loyalist period in Birchtown, not only because of their quantity but their quality as well."
- (ii) Testing of a probable Black Loyalist dwelling, north of the town, to confirm that it dated to the eighteenth century. The presence of several diagnostic artifacts at this site suggested a date of 1783 to before the 1790s, and that the occupation is almost certainly Black Loyalist. The single stone wall found indicates a very rudimentary structure, which appears to represent a more typical Black Loyalist dwelling and stands in contrast to the relative wealth of the Acker site.
- (iii) Bisection of a selected rock mound (one of a series of 22 mounds), in the hopes of recovering stratigraphic and artifactual data that would answer questions regarding the age of the mound, cultural affiliation, and/or function. Although excavation revealed that the mound was deliberately constructed, and does not appear to be the result of standard field clearing as we understand it, no features or artifacts were encountered to suggest age, cultural affiliation or function.

Results of archaeological investigation that are available to community partners, as well as other interested parties, include:

- Approximately 16,000 recovered artifacts, and associated documentation, at the History Section, NSM
- Photographic documentation of the fieldwork undertaken, particularly extensive for Birchtown
- Documentation of seventeen sites associated with Black Loyalists, using the Maritime Archaeology Resource Inventory (MARI) form

Public Education

The public education component of Remembering Black Loyalists, Black Communities involved the development and delivery of a variety of products and activities designed to increase awareness and understanding about the story of Nova Scotia's Black Loyalists to a wide range of audiences. These ranged from community meetings and newsletters, to press releases and presentations, participation in the filming of Loyalties (an award-winning documentary about the NSM's research on Nova Scotia's Black Loyalists), publications and exhibits.

Results from the historical and archaeological research are available in four reports: Tracing the History of Tracadie Loyalists, 1776-1787. NSM Curatorial Report No. 91, by Carmelita Robertson, features short biographies of people who arrived in 1783 in Port Mouton, Nova Scotia, as listed in the Book of Negroes, many of whom relocated to Guysborough after fire burned Port Mouton to the ground in 1784. It also includes information found in the Loyalist Muster Roll of Chedabucto Negroes, 1776 -1785, and in the Tracadie land grant (more commonly known as the Brownspriggs grant) which gave 3000 acres to seventy-four Black Loyalist families in 1787. 146 pages, 8 illustrations.

Archaeological Surveys in Two Black Communities, 1998: Surveying the Tracadie Area and Testing Two Sites in Birchtown. NSM Curatorial Report No. 92 Stephen Powell describes the project to locate and document settlement features associated with early Black Loyalist settlers in the 1787 Brownspriggs grant area of Antigonish and Guysborough Counties. Laird Niven describes the formal testing of a house cellar at AkDi-6 and the bisection of an enigmatic rock mound at Ak-Di-21 in Shelburne County. 57 pages, 20 illustrations.

Was this the home of Stephen Blucke?: The excavation of AkDi-23, Birchtown, Shelburne County. NSM Curatorial Report No. 93. Laird Niven describes the house feature and the exceptional artifacts recovered during the 1998 archaeological investigation at this late 18th-century site. 80 pages, 47 illustrations.

The Shelburne/Birchtown Black Loyalists. NSM Curatorial Report No. 94. Ruth Holmes Whitehead presents short biographies of all Black individuals emigrating to Shelburne County, Nova Scotia in 1783, after the American Revolution, excerpted from a copy of the Book of Negroes in the collection of the Nova Scotia Archives and Records Management, Halifax, NS, with some additional information. 294 pages, 7 illustrations.

Led by Manager of Interpretation Sheila Stevenson, an exhibit team (designer Grant Murray, Ruth Holmes Whitehead, Carmelita Robertson, Henry Bishop, David States, Kevin Thomas, John Tate, and Deborah Scott) produced the travelling exhibition Remembering Black Loyalists, Black Communities. It consisted of thirty-six running feet of text and graphics, including panels with the names of all known Black Loyalists, and three cases of archaeological artifacts.

The exhibit opened at the Nova Scotia Museum of Natural History in Halifax on January 26, 2000, in time for African Heritage Month. Its itinerary for the period June 2000 to late 2003 includes the Black Cultural Centre, Birchtown Community Centre, the Shelburne County Museum, the Antigonish Heritage Museum, the Queens County Museum, the Cumberland County Museum, the Museum of Industry (all in Nova Scotia) and the New Brunswick Museum.

The education program accompanying the exhibition was developed to engage the school audience in active learning.

The exhibit content was expanded and produced in two Nova Scotia Museum Info sheets, Remembering Black Loyalists, Black Communities, Part One and Part Two.

The exhibit, education program, and Info material provided the content for a virtual exhibit produced by the History Section of the Nova Scotia Museum and contracted by the Canadian Heritage Information Network (CHIN), to be part of Canada's Virtual Museum for a five-year period from 2001 to 2005. The URL is <http://www.museum.gov.ns.ca/BlackLoyalists>.

Community Development

Developing community capacity with respect to heritage preservation and presentation and the associated benefits which it was hoped would accrue, were key elements of Remembering Black Loyalists, Black Communities. This goal was accomplished in a variety of ways through working with individuals and organizations in both communities.

Through direct experience, community researchers and archaeology field assistants increased their understanding of sources, materials, and methodologies associated with historical research and archaeology, and developed their skills in these areas.

By sharing information and ideas, and making the views, interests and needs of their communities known, Advisory Group members influenced the development and outcomes of the project, and furthered their knowledge of various aspects of heritage work. Museum staff also learned from the knowledge and experience that the Advisory Group members contributed during this exchange.

Members of the Black Loyalist Heritage Society and the Brownspriggs Historical Committee accessed local financial support and hired temporary staff to undertake heritage-based activities. Societies now have access to the foundation of knowledge, artifacts, and support materials needed to develop interpretive centres or museums that tell the Black Loyalist story, and to undertake related initiatives, such as applying for historic site designation.

New knowledge about Black Loyalist heritage, combined with increased profile through media coverage and interpretive products such as the travelling exhibit, has the potential to result in a strengthened sense of community identity and pride. While this outcome is particularly meaningful for individuals with Black Loyalist roots, it has the potential to positively impact communities as a whole, and lead to increased economic well-being through the development of cultural tourism facilities and activities.

Finally, the project brought together two communities with a common heritage, and forged relations between the communities and the provincial museum. In the process of bringing together those interested in the story of Nova Scotia's Black Loyalists, understandings and relationships were developed that, if properly nurtured, will continue to help transcend barriers between Black and White, and establish the trust and respect needed to improve inter-racial relations in the long term.

More about the Black Cultural Heritage Data Collection: 1991-1997

By the time work on Remembering Black Loyalists, Black Communities began in 1998, the Nova Scotia Museum had already compiled a collection of information on Nova Scotia's Black heritage that includes primary research, archaeological investigations, oral histories, and historical photographs and illustrations.

More specifically, the collection contains the following material:

Newspaper Survey

A total of 682 historical newspapers in the Nova Scotia Archives and Records Management collection, Halifax, have been surveyed for mentions of Black persons; 229 contained Black material yielding a total of 2500 references. Skeletal data from all references has been recorded; the complete text of some references has also been recorded. This information is available on a disk at Nova Scotia Archives and Records Management, and in hard copy with the History

Section of the Nova Scotia Museum.

Newspapers surveyed include:

INTRODUCTION

People of African descent have been in Nova Scotia for a long time. They have played an important, but often understated, role in the formation of the province. Yet acknowledgment or recognition of the fact that 'Black' history of Nova Scotia is also part of the whole history of Nova Scotia has been a long time in coming. There still remains the belief that all Blacks in Nova Scotia are immigrants of the last 100 years or so. Beginning in the twentieth century, many individuals and groups have been trying to right this oversight.

How far back can one go before there are recorded references to the Black presence in Nova Scotia? From the early 1600s to mid 1700s, Nova Scotia was under French control and was called Acadie. After the 1720s there were more than over 300 people of African descent enslaved at Fortress Louisbourg, Cape Breton Island. When the British gained full control over the province in 1763, Blacks continued to be part of the population. A major influx of Blacks into Nova Scotia occurred at the end of the American War of Independence (also known as the American Revolution), which lasted from 1776 to 1783.

This war was fought because European settlers, mainly French and German, and English-speaking settlers, living in thirteen American colonies no longer wanted to be ruled by a government that was far away in Britain; they wanted to be self-governed. During this war the British offered freedom to any 'slave' who ran away from a 'master' and joined the British. Of course many people jumped at the chance for freedom and took up the offer. Some served with the British as soldiers in Black regiments like the Black Company of Pioneers. This regiment, first raised in Philadelphia, was disbanded at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, in 1783.

Some who fled to the British side served as troops in mercenary bands under other Blacks, such as Colonel Tye, an ex-slave, whose former name had been Titus. When Colonel Tye died of battle wounds, command of the group was taken over by Stephen Blucke, who eventually settled in Birchtown, Nova Scotia. Other escapees served within various British military departments, such as the Royal Artillery or the Wagon Master General's Department.

When the war ended, many people who had sided with the British made their way to New York, the last safe haven for any British supporters still on American soil. From there they set out for other places to live. Among them was a group now commonly called the Black Loyalists. This included free people, slaves, and indentured servants. Any person who had been freed as a consequence of the British war promise had to leave American territory, or risk being forced back into slavery. To do so, they had to produce a Certificate of Freedom, a document that proved they had supported or joined the British during war-time. Any person who had been free before the war had to have an official document proving their status as free person.

Others who were enslaved by British soldiers or civilians loyal to the Crown were permitted to leave because they were seen as the property of the person who enslaved them, and as such must go where the master went. Keep in mind that slavery was not abolished in British colonies, including Nova Scotia, until 1834. In 1783 it was still legal to own a slave in the British colonies.

Because of the slavery issue, many of the Blacks leaving New York at this time were recorded in a document called the "Book of Negroes." This bound manuscript was an inventory of all those Blacks aboard British vessels who were legally permitted to leave New York. It was compiled by Americans and the British so that American slave owners could be compensated for their loss of property – their slaves.

The "Book of Negroes" records about 3500 people of African descent leaving New York for various parts of the world: Belgium, England, Germany, Quebec, and Nova Scotia (which, in 1783, included the present-day province of New Brunswick). Of the 3500 people listed about 3000 set out for various places in Nova Scotia: Annapolis Royal, Fort Cumberland, Halifax, Saint John, Saint John River, Port Roseway (present-day Shelburne), and "Port Mattoon" (Port Mouton). Although the bulk of those Black Loyalists recorded as departing the U.S. are found in the "Book of Negroes", there are many other Blacks who fled the states during or right after the war whose names are not found

These people made their way to Nova Scotia either as slaves or as free people, often working on fishing and whaling vessels. One example is Thomas Brownspriggs. It is believed that he came as part of a group that sailed into Chedabucto Bay, Nova Scotia, from St. Augustine, Florida. Listed as being aboard the Argo was a Black man named Henry Thomas, a well-educated servant to a Captain Brownriggs. It is believed that Henry Thomas later became known as Thomas Brownspriggs, the man who was instrumental in acquiring a 3000-acre (1200-hectare) grant of land in Tracadie for himself and 73 other Black Loyalist grantees in 1787.

Those like Brownspriggs who made it to Nova Scotia from ports other than New York are not listed in the "Book of Negroes." They are harder to trace; but it is not an impossible feat. All of those who came to Nova Scotia as Black Loyalists, or during the Black Loyalist influx, need to have their histories recovered. As descendants of their legacy, we owe them that much.

Explanation of this Report

This report traces the history of those Black Loyalists who were granted 3000 acres (1200 hectares) of land at Tracadie, Nova Scotia, in 1787. The "Book of Negroes" chronicles the departure of some of them from the States in 1783, as part of a larger group of Black Loyalists whose initial stop in Nova Scotia was Port Mouton. Many of those who first settled at Port Mouton were forced to relocate in 1784 after a fire burned the town to the ground. The greater part of the Port Mouton Black Loyalists, along with some White Loyalists, relocated to Chedabucto, now called Guysborough, on the eastern shore of Nova Scotia.

Using a document called the "Loyalist Muster Roll of Chedabucto Negroes, 1776 - 1787," one can follow their travels and determine who left Port Mouton and ended up at Chedabucto. A muster roll is a list of names of people who drew government rations and provisions. Some people found in the muster roll at Guysborough are not found in the "Book of Negroes" because, as previously stated, some Loyalists made their way to Nova Scotia from American states other than New York, and via different means.

After four years of living in Guysborough, without adequate land to farm, 74 Black Loyalist families chose to petition for land elsewhere. In 1787 they were granted 3000 acres (1200 hectares) of land at Tracadie. Information on this is found in the documents dealing with the Tracadie land grant of 1787, more commonly known as the Brownspriggs Grant.

This report is divided into three chapters. The first chapter contains biographies of those persons listed in the "Book of Negroes" who left New York for Port Mouton, Nova Scotia. The second chapter contains information found in the "Loyalist Muster Roll of Chedabucto Negroes, 1776 - 1785." The information found in the muster roll is very limited, giving only the name of the individual and whether they are a man, woman or child. The third chapter of the report examines the 1787 Tracadie land-grant documents, including the processes taking place before the people were granted the land, a list of who was granted the land, and where the land was located. At the beginning of each chapter is an introduction with a brief history of the document used, and an explanation to the information that is presented in the chapter.

There are four appendices: Name Variations of Tracadie Land Grantees, Ships departing for Port Mouton, NS, 1783, Origin Distribution Chart of Black Loyalists of Port Mouton, and Crown Land Grant Book 19, document 15. Following the appendices is a selected bibliography of the source material quoted or referred to in the report. Finally, there is an Index of Names that includes general introduction followed by two sections of names. Part I lists people with known and verified surnames, taken from the "Book of Negroes," the muster roll, or the Tracadie land grant. Sometimes these people are found in all three documents, with slight name variations. The earliest recorded name appears first, then any variations are indicated in brackets. Part II includes those people who have no documented surnames. There is an explanation at the beginning to help the reader along.

If the reader is using this report for genealogical purposes, they should go to the index first and check for names they are interested in, and for their variations.

Black Loyalists from New York to Port Mouton, 1783

The "Book of Negroes" manuscript of 1783 is an important source for researching many Black Loyalist ancestors who came to Nova Scotia. It is a contemporary record of many of those who left the United States for other parts of the world following the American War of Independence (or American Revolutionary War), 1775-1783.

Introduction

From the beginning of the American War of Independence until its conclusion, there were a number of Blacks fleeing bondage in America. Many of them went to Nova Scotia as free persons, slaves, and indentured servants. Most of those who were free had gained their freedom by accepting the terms of freedom offered them in two proclamations made during the war. These proclamations are known by the names of the men who issued them. They are the Dunmore Proclamation and the Clinton Proclamation, both of which loosely state that ‘to all Negroes who desert their Rebel masters...freedom.’ Many people took advantage of this offer.

Towards the end of the war, many people who had sided with the British made their way to the last British bastion on American soil – New York. There, plans were made for their evacuation. This included those Blacks who had gained their freedom, and those slaves who continued to be enslaved to others. During this time, the American spokesperson, General George Washington, future first president of the United States and representative of American slave holders, requested that all Blacks behind British lines be returned to their rightful owners. The British commander-in-chief, Sir Guy Carleton, refused on the grounds that the promise of freedom made to the Blacks in the Dunmore and Clinton proclamations would be upheld.

After much discussion, a resolution was reached; all Black people who had in their possession Certificates of Freedom would be allowed to leave. These Certificates of Freedom were issued by either General Birch or General Musgrave to every Black person who made their way to British lines during the war. Also, as part of the agreement, an invoice had to be drawn up recording the name, age, physical description, former master, former residence, and year of escape (if applicable), for every Black person who was leaving from New York to go to other parts of the world. This inventory was to be used as a checklist to verify that the enslaver had lost his ‘property’, that his ‘property’ was indeed the "Negro " as found listed in the "Book"; and therefore that he, the enslaver, could be compensated for his loss.

An Explanation of the Text

If the reader is using this report for genealogical purposes, it is suggested that you look first at the Index of Names that comes at the end of the report before proceeding any further. The index is set up alphabetically by surname. The reader is also advised to keep in mind that names undergo spelling changes from person to person and from time period to time period. In the index some of the variations are indicated. Further explanation is found in the index section.

This section of the report presents information from the “Book of Negroes” pertaining to those Black Loyalists who made their way from New York to Port Mouton, Nova Scotia, in 1783.

The information is not presented in the manner in which it appeared in the original document, but all of the information that was part of the original document is included. The format is as follows: at the top right of each page is information relating to the vessel. This includes the name of the vessel, the master of the vessel, and the date the vessel was inspected for the purpose of inventorying the Black passengers. This information appears only on the first page for the vessel passenger list. If the list is lengthy and runs into several pages, only the name of the vessel is found at the top of the page, with /continued . . . written beside it. For example, Brig Elijah/ continued . . .

For the passenger, the information that is given is as follows:

Name of the individual, age (more than likely an estimation in 1783), physical description (if available).

Former place of residence before going to New York and Port Mouton.

The status of the person, e.g., born free.

Date the person left or was left by their enslaver, and the name of the enslaver.

If a person was indentured to another person as a servant, the name of the person to whom they were indentured, called the indenturer is given (if applicable).

The department of the British forces with which the person was stationed. Possession of a "Certificate of Freedom".

Keep in mind that not all of this information was applicable to everyone. Some people will have all of the information listed above, and others will have parts of this information listed above.

Occasionally, there will be a person on this list who was indentured to another. Sometimes a person was still enslaved by a White Loyalist or soldier. This information, if applicable, is also included.

Sample entry 1:

Molly, 21, likely wench

Formerly resided in Charlestown, South Carolina.

Left enslaver William Elliot of Charlestown, prior to the siege of that town in 1780.

Stationed behind British Lines within the Wagon Master General's Department.

Someone researching Molly would know from this entry that she was approximately 21 years of age in 1783. She was in good physical condition. Prior to her arrival in New York, Molly had lived in Charlestown, South Carolina, as a slave to William Elliot of that town. Just before siege of Charlestown (March-May 1780), Molly made her escape. We don't know what happened to Molly between 1780 and 1783. We do know that she ended up being stationed behind the British lines in the Wagon Master General's Department. When British Loyalists, soldiers and supporters evacuated New York, Molly was listed as being aboard the sloop Elk, inspected on the October 7, 1783. She was destined for Port Mouton, Nova Scotia.

Sample Entry 2:

Phil Birtley, 50, ordinary worn out

Formerly resided in Willtown, South Carolina.

Certified free as per General Musgrave Certificate.

Indentured to John Nash.

In this example, we have a middle-aged man named Phil Birtley. His physical description says he is worn out. He used to lived in Willtown, South Carolina, as a slave to John Birtley. Phil Birtley left John early in 1780. He had in his possession a Certificate of Freedom signed by General Musgrave, which meant that he had gotten his freedom by escaping his rebel master and joining the British. He had indentured himself to a John Nash, to come to Nova Scotia. Phil is listed as one of the Black Loyalists inspected aboard the brig Jenny bound for Port Mouton in 1783.

Once again it is suggested that the person looking for their 'roots', start with the Index of Names beginning on page 129.

The information that follows was taken from the "Book of Negroes" and checked against the Black Loyalist Directory, by Graham Russell Hodges. The copy of the "Book of Negroes" from which this information was extracted is located on microfilm at the Nova Scotia Archives and Records Management. The actual copy is available at the Public Records Office (PRO) in London, England. The data has been edited, to a degree.

Map of Chedabucto Bay

Black Loyalists of Guysborough, 1776 - 1785

Eleven vessels left New York for Port Mouton, Nova Scotia in 1783. Of the 558 Black Loyalists aboard these ships, 34 per cent were from Virginia, 17 per cent were from places unknown, 16 per cent were from South Carolina, 10 per cent were from New Jersey, and the remainder were from various states throughout the U.S. To date very little data has been accumulated on the lives of these people during their initial few months in Nova Scotia.

Their stay in Port Mouton was a short one. In 1784 a fire razed the town to the ground. The people relocated to other parts of the province. Most of them resettled along the eastern shore, at Chedabucto, on the eastern shore, later renamed Guysborough. Included amongst those who went to Chedabucto were many individuals who would later listed as grantees at Tracadie.

The listing that follows was taken from the "Loyalist Muster Roll of Chedabucto Negroes, 1776 - 1785." A muster roll was a list of individuals who were collecting government rations. Many early Loyalist settlers, Black and White alike, relied on these rations.

This listing gives the data as it was found in the muster roll, and, whether that person's name is also found in the "Book of Negroes" (abbreviated in the list as BON).

If a person is recorded in the "Book of Negroes," it means they left from New York in 1783, and readers would be well advised to check the index and find the reference page for their biography found in chapter one of this report.

There are various reasons that an individual might not be recorded in the "Book of Negroes." They might have arrived in province independently aboard fishing vessels or whaling boats, or they could been part of a group of Loyalists who settled at Chedabucto after coming from St. Augustine,

Florida. (Their story will need be told in another report.)

No other information appears in the original muster roll, except the names of the individuals and their status. The data begins on the next page.

During the initial settlement in the 1700s, Tracadie was an all-inclusive place-name for the area that today has been split into the smaller communities of Tracadie, Big Tracadie, Monastery, Rear Monastery, East Tracadie, and Upper Big Tracadie. Most of the Brownspriggs grant was located around East Tracadie, Monastery and Rear Monastery.

Introduction to the Tracadie Land Grant of 1787, also known as the Brownspriggs Grant.

Life in Guysborough was tolerable during the warmer months. There was plenty of fish, fowl, game, and edible wild plants. But when winter came the situation changed. First to suffer were "the poor and improvident, and then among those who never refused to share their fast diminishing stores with their less favoured neighbours" (Hart 1975, 62).

Years of having no land to cultivate plagued the free Black population. Hard-pressed to support their families, they had to rely on the wider community. Some of the men worked in the woods, lumbering, others worked on fishing boats, whaling boats, or as ships' pilots. The women did what Black women in North America have done for centuries; they were domestic servants, doing the laundering, cleaning, and cooking for white households.

In 1787, four years after their arrival in the province, several Blacks of Guysborough had had enough. Fed up with being landless, and completely at the mercy of the whims of the wider community for employment, they chose to petition the government for land. Their representative, Thomas Brownspriggs presented their petition.

Their petition was heard, and a location for resettlement was chosen for the seventy-four families, at the head of Tracadie Harbour. The surveyor underwent the usual checks of ensuring that the land was not laid out or reserved.

Because the designated area was proven available, the surveyor measured the land and the applicable documents were processed, thereby granting 3000 acres of land to 74 Black Loyalists.

¹This was probably an error on the part of the person who recorded the grant. The letters 'a' and 'r' seemed to have been transposed. This name should probably read 'Farmer'.

Evidently the issue of land granting was not a simple matter. Primary source documents indicate that many complexities common in early land granting practices factored into the settling of the Brownspriggs grant. Although both the warrant and the grant are clear about the dimensions of the land and the names of the grantees, the land was not settled accordingly. Government correspondence states that Thomas Brownspriggs, who was to oversee the granting of 40.5 acre lots per grantee, allotted part of the land to several persons who were not listed on the original 1787 grant. The government also subsequently regranted large portions of the land to other settlers, on the pretense that the land had been granted previous to the Black Loyalist petition, but that they had not noticed their error until after the fact.

Circumstances such as these contributed to the resettling of Black Loyalists further into the interior of the province. Not many of the descendants of the original Tracadie Land Grant actually hold property on the land of the first grant. Further research into land tenure is a necessary component in recovering the history of the people of the Tracadie grant; although constituting a part of the overall project, it is not a part of this particular report.

Name Variations of Tracadie Land Grantees

The starting point for this appendix was the 74 grantee names. From there we looked back through earlier records to find spelling variations of these particular surnames.

The table that follows shows, in the first column, the names as they appear in the grant. The second column has the names as they appear in the the "Loyalist Muster Roll of Chedabucto Negroes." The final column contains the names as they are found in the "Book of Negroes."

Please take note that many of the surnames have undergone changes throughout time, therefore the way the name was spelled on the grant is not necessarily the way the name is found spelled today. Check the Index of Names for variations.

For example, the name Berden at present has at least two variant forms: Borden and Bowden; and, the name Dismal has evolved into Desmond.

INDEX OF NAMES

This index is divided into two sections. Part I lists people who have surnames as recorded in the “Book of Negroes,” the “Chedabucto Muster Roll,” or the “Tracadie Land Grant.” This includes Black Loyalists, enslavers, and indenturers. Part II contains those persons having no surnames recorded in the “Book of Negroes,” the “Chedabucto Muster Roll,” or the “Tracadie Land Grant.”

For those persons with surnames, all entries are arranged alphabetically by surname, followed by first name and the page(s) on which the name appears. Any known variants from the three sources used in this report are also given. The earliest known version of the name appears first, followed by the variants in brackets. For example:

Lastname [var. <name variant>], Firstname, page number

Backhus [var. Bacchus], Molly, 79, 94

Sometimes a person was not recorded in the “Book of Negroes” with a surname, but is later found in one of the two other documents with a surname. They are listed with the earliest known surname.

For example, Diana [also Dinah] Lining has no surname in the “Book of Negroes.” Her enslaver is listed as a John Lynning. In the muster roll and grant she is listed as Lining. It can be deduced that this is probably one in the same person. Therefore she is listed in the index of people with surnames, under the name of Lining.

If a child had no surname, but was clearly identified in a document as being the child of a woman with a surname, then that child is listed with the surname of the mother.

Those persons with no identifiable surnames have been listed under their first name in part II of the index. As a matter of respect, they have not been listed under the surname of the person who enslaved them, because there is not enough evidence, at this point, to conclude that they permanently adopted that surname as their own. The surname of the person who enslaved them is listed in brackets [], and can be looked up in the surname index.

* This means that the child listed is not listed as having a master. If the mother is listed with the enslaver's name then that name is listed with the child as well.

For example:

Hannah [Wright]

Nancy [Wright*]

In this example, Hannah is the mother of Nancy. Hannah was enslaved by a person with the last name Wright. Nancy was originally listed only as the child of Hannah, with no other name given. Because Nancy is the child of Hannah, shown beside her is the name of her mother's enslaver, with an asterisk to show that this does not necessarily mean that the same person enslaved the child.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to thank everyone who supported me in this endeavour. This includes staff of the Nova Scotia Museum, History Section, and the advisory committee for the project “Remembering Black Loyalists, Black Communities.”

I also thank board members of the Brownspriggs Historical Society, consisting of Patricia Skinner, Gloria Desmond, and Donna Hochman. Their inquiries as to when the report would be available to the public kept the development process at a brisk pace.

Finally, thanks to Kim Robertson for her patience, advice and encouragement.

With this report, I acknowledge some of those ancestors who went before.
