

About the Contributors

Grace Stairs: After years of honing an interest in reading, writing, crafts, and dance, Grace has come to love libraries and their potential to connect people with their community and passions.

Kory Melnick: Kory is a lifelong learner who is passionate about fostering safe spaces for people to discover, play, and create. Kory is currently pursuing a Master of Information and Master of Resource and Environmental Management combined degree in Halifax, where she currently lives. When Kory is not reading or in the library you can often find her outside exploring or playing with her dogs!

Janine McGregor: Originally from small town Ontario, Janine has worked, studied and travelled in many countries including the Netherlands, New Zealand and Australia. This time abroad taught her the importance of libraries and inspired her to move to Halifax to pursue a Master of Information. An avid reader, runner and vegan cook, she hopes to use her passion for librarianship to help libraries convey their value.

Michelle Westerkamp: Growing up in the Maritimes, Michelle has come to appreciate how libraries have become a staple place of sharing information and personal growth. When not in the thralls of schoolwork, she enjoys reading too many books, playing video games, writing poetry, and scrolling through TikTok.

Hannah DeLucry From New Brunswick, Hannah has found a love for community care through a variety of different tasks, including community gardening, farming, and librarianship. Dedicated to life-long learning, Hannah spends a lot of time watching movies, reading, baking, and working with ceramics.
