

ABOUT THE CONTRIBUTORS

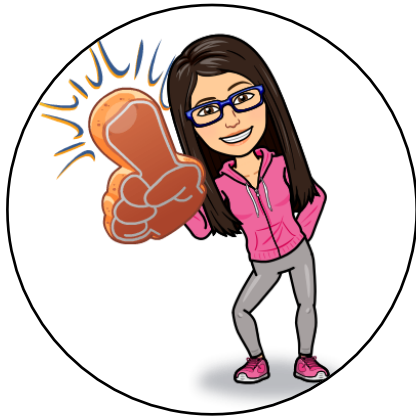

Ann Terese MacDonald is a graduate of the St. Francis Xavier University Human Nutrition program and an MLIS candidate (2020) at Dalhousie University. She loves to read and cook and read cookbooks. Career goals include public librarianship and working to make libraries welcoming and inclusive community spaces.

Mike Roy is a graduate of the English Literature and American Studies program at Mount Allison University and an MLIS candidate at Dalhousie University (2020). He loves pop culture, baseball, pop music, sleeping in, and believing he's still "with it" when he hears the latest SoundCloud rapper pop up on his Twitter timeline.

Siobhan Wiggans is a MLIS student at Dalhousie University, Library Assistant at Halifax Public Libraries, and parent of two girls, age 2 and 12. When she has a spare minute, she loves cooking, crafting, reading, watching documentaries and eating popcorn

Jill Liu is a quirky, first-year MLIS (Master of Library and Information Studies) student at Dalhousie University. She used to work in a Canadian high school library in China. She is obsessed with animations and comics, though she cannot do any art.

Laura Little is an energetic, dynamic, and fun loving information professional. She thinks about Beyoncé and popular culture a lot. Her hobbies include meditating, climbing, yoga and driving around with her friends.