

DAVID SHESKIN

THE MOST INTERESTING WOMAN IN THE WORLD

SHE HAS BEEN AWARDED THREE GRAMMIES for singing in the shower. She was once bitten by a rattlesnake, and the rattlesnake died. Every major city in the Western Hemisphere has a restaurant named after her. She is the life of parties she never attends. She can start an earthquake just by whistling. Her clothes never wrinkle. No less than thirty songs have been written about her vagina. She has taught every parrot in the state of Nebraska to speak French. She won a Nobel Prize for her chicken cacciatore recipe. She invented the colour taupe. She once taught a porcupine to play the violin. She has an Olympic gold medal for washing her hair faster than anyone else on the planet. She can count from zero to infinity in less than thirty seconds. Her birthday is celebrated as a national holiday in sixteen countries. She once won the Man Booker Prize for a sympathy note written to a past lover. When she visits art museums she is encouraged to modify the paintings so that they are more to her taste. She is the only person whose cooking has been awarded a four-star Michelin rating. She can stop a tsunami just by humming. She once landed a helicopter on top of the Leaning Tower of Pisa. She regularly teaches members of the British royal family about proper etiquette. Her tears are sought after as a cure for rabies. She won a Pulitzer Prize for her shopping lists. Countries have gone to war fighting over her nationality. When she vacations in Africa she plays pinochle with baboons. She has discovered a new element yet refuses to tell anyone about it. She won an Oscar just for the way she drinks a cup of coffee. When she gets out of the bath the water is cleaner than when she went in. She once taught a chimpanzee to fly an airplane. Her urine is considered an aphrodisiac. She was awarded a MacArthur Fellowship for the message on her answering machine. A jeweller once offered her ten million dollars for one of her nipples.